Aspersions on Member of

For the fact is that President Wilson asked for the recall of Major C. K. Craufurd Stuart, personal Secrelary of Viscount Grey and failed to get his wish. To those persons who have believed that Mr. Wilson need ity at least of the British Ambareau only nod his head and the British wid do his bidding, the incident reveals a surprisingly uncompromising attitude in the part of Lord Grey which must give given President Wilson offense. MAY HAVE CAUSED WILSON TO REFUSE TO SEE GREY.

There is good reason to believe that while Secretary Lansing brought the matter to the attention of Viscount Former Premier on Stand in His Grey, President Wilson was not altogether satisfied that the Secretary of State had pressed the matter sufficiently, and while the President's PARIS. Lord Reading was soon to depart, anyway, and Major Stuart himself appealed to Scoretary Lansing to be permitted to stay. Saying the stories were untrue. Confirmence at Paris began. Secretary Lansing had acted of his Secretary Lansing had acted of his own initiative in the matter and thought he had made his views sufficiently known to the British Government when, to his surprise, the same Major Stuart came back to the United States as the personal Secretary of Viscount Grey. The very first time the distinguished British statesman visited the Department of State, he was apprized of the previous incident concerning his prnation of perjury in the trial of Joseps, personal secretary, which it was supposed he had learned from the British foreign office, but no formal request was made that Major Stuart

SECOND ORDER ABOUT STUART CAME FROM WILSON. Out of a clear sky came an instruc-

At first they were not given, inasmuch as our Government properly contended that in diplomacy when a person becomes "non grata" that is all that is necessary. For instance, before any American Ambassador can be received in Great Britain or France or Italy, or anywhere else, our Government must first inquire if the individual is personally satisfactory to the head of the foreign The 8.000 mile journey of Ester Nieri, state. Ordinarily a request of this sort from the President to a foreign Amwent home with Viscout Grey. went home with Viscout Grey. While the latter was in the United States Major Stuart had charge of the Ambussador's affairs, and while it is true that he was not on the diplomatic list nor in the British diplomatic service, our Government construed him to be a member of the Ambassador's household and as such subject to the supervision or authority at least of the British Ambassa.

So Major Stuart was not sent ome and Viscount Trey was not re-lved. Just after the latter reached England he wrote a letter to the London Times supporting the viewpoint of President Wilson's oppo-nents on the League of Nations. Though the document was a report Though the document was a report to the British people on the treaty controversy in America, there was not a word in it of the President's liness and the factors revolving about the part Mr. Wilson had played in the whole business, while consider-able space was devoted to a justification of the viewpoint of certain Senators.

Officials may minimize the ortance of the Stuart incident. They will not want to give the impress that it had anything to do with the coldness between the White House and Viscount Grey. But people who may be worstering why the official relations between Great Britain and the United States may not be as smooth as they should be, might find an ex-planation in the fact that the British empire has either kept its Embusey here unfilled or sent men here who have been unfortunate in their per-sonal relations with the White House.
